The Removal of Charles Summer from the Chairmanship of Committee of Foreign Re-lations—The Massachusetts Senator a Fireand Mischie -maker-An English

Chairmanship of Committee of Forcian Relations—The Blassachusetts Sonaly a Fleebyand and Mischie.—maker—An English Opinton.

(From the London Standard, March 15.)

Mr. Summer is a man whose political importance is sery-disproportionate to his personal qualities. He have been always and the extreme violence of the first occasion intorious by the extreme violence of the first occasion have been always and the extreme violence of the first occasion have been always and the extreme violence of the first occasion have been always and the extreme violence of the first occasion have been always and the extreme the seasons and the extreme the seasons have always and the extreme the seasons have always and the extreme that seasons have always and the health of the hardy creed of the seasons which is the continued and creation of personal violence, which, committed under circumstances of peculiar indecorum, exaggerated by parisanship, made of Mr. Summer to the foreness place among the chies of the republican faction. He was the most vehement champion of the war, the coadjuit of Mr. Summer to the foreness place among the chies of the republican faction. He was the most vehement champion of the war, the coadjuit of Mr. Stevens in crying for vengeance on the South and one of the most powerful and inveterate opponents of President Johnson. When the personal popularity of President frant secured another turn of ascendancy to his party it was scarcely possible that a keen rivalry should not grow up between the political and parliamentary chief of the professional section of the party and the President whom it had selected as its most available representative. Mr. Summer expected to control the policy of the Cabinet, and did for some time exert a powerful influence over it. He was allowed to appropriate for his friend and the president was provided to the president of the profe which the South has suffered may be first relaxed and finally exchanged for freedom and constitutional self-government.

As regards the foreign policy of the administration, and especially its relations with this country, the overthrow of Mr. Sunner can hardly fail to exert a beneficial inducance. We are willing to believe that the Schatter from Massachusetis, no more than the great inajority of American statesmen, desires or contemplates as seriously probable a war with England, especially a war upon the Alshama claims. But Mr. Sumner and his party have always sought to gain popularity by invectives against England, calculated to excite a feeling which they might at last have been powerless to restrain, and by pursuing a course well adapted to bring matters to a point at which go amicable solution would have been possible. They may not want war; but they have acted so long as if nothing they could say could bring about war, as if they might safely abuse and ment us to their hearts' content, that their defeat was a necessary preliminary to any settlement between the two nations. Mr. Sumner himself was mainly answerable for the discourceous and unwarrentable rejection of the convention concluded by Mr. Reverly Johnson; his famous speech put into lengible shape the most extravagant pretensions ever preferred by intemperate Americans—pretensions which rendered negotiation hopeless, it not impossible; his political friends, as General Butler, for example, had recently striven to embarrass and embitter the relations between us, and had imported into the discussion thereof the imported into the discussion thereof the imported into the discussion thereof the imported into the discussion discussion of Canada, as if for the express purpose of preventing any friendly or pacific understanding; and so long as they controlled the Senate it was vain to expect that any convention which even the present government of England could sign would be ratified in America. The New Organization of Alsace and

The New Organization of Alsace and Lorraine.

Count Bismarck has forwarded a draft for the new organization of Alsace and Lorraine to the Federal Council. It will be laid before the German Federal Diet, and contains the following stipulations:—

Alsace and Lorraine, having been ceded by treaty to the German Emperor, become a separate territory of the German emperor, and ill be governed by an administration emanating circet from the Emperor. A government constituted, according to imperial orders will superintend the finance (self-governing), education, clerical and agricultural departments. As the appointment of separate ministrates would involve too great sacrifices on account of the moderate extent of the territory (280 square miles, containing 1,580,000 souls, intermediate authorities will be established in Strasbourg, as the provincial capital, to undertake the branch administration of the duties allotted to the central government. The intermediate authorities will be subordinate to the Prussian Ministers of Junice and Commerce, who will not dispose of the affairs of the imperial territory in the name of the King of Prussia, but according to the directions of the Emperor of Germany. The provincial courts of justice and the petty sessions retain their former organization. The Court of Appeals is transferred from Colmar to Strasbourg. The financial code of the North German Confederation will take the place of the "Code Fenal."

Women Followed by Soldiers Into the Church.

The following protest was left on the loth inst. with W. Jervoise, locum lenens of the post recently held by Mr. Odo Russell, for transmission to the British ambassador at Florence:—

We, the undersigned, being British subjects, state for the information of her Majesty's representative at the Italian Court, that on this day (Friday) the lith of March, 1871, we were subjected to inconvenience, insuit and danger when attending the Leasen service in the Church of the Gesu in Rome. We think it right to say that we had no political motive whatever in visiting the church. The greater portion of us are Cathohes, and went for the purposes of devotion simply. Some of us are Protestants. We were nearly all strangers to each other, our commen danger to-day being our first introduction. The sermon which was preached by a Jesuit father, named Tommani, and contained nothing political or calculated to irritate any one) was over about twelve o'clock. The congregation on attempting do leave the church found the doors beset by a band of men, some hundreds in number, armed with bludgeons. Those who tried to get out were differed back into the church and compelled to remain there for a considerable time. Some took refuge in the garden adjoining, and were subsequently escorted to their homes by National Guards. We stayed in the clurch until Signor Gadia, the royal commissary, appeared from the wind of the high altar, where a priest was celebrating mass and administering to communicants. Women fainted; and one of us saw a female savagely struck in the forehead with a sword, the blood gushing from the wound. Several of us saw unollending bersons struck with a word the save changes and British subjects, he escorted us with a file of soldiers to the outside of the church as far as the Via Cesarini, when he sainted us and left us. We went then to the readence of Mr. Jervoise, who requested us to put in writing the fact which came under our knowledge. We append our names:—W. Mariere Brady, D.

chester county that the second trial of Isaac Van Wart Buckhout, the Sleepy Hollow murderer, would be commenced in the Court of Oyer and Terminer at White Plains yesterday, crowds of citizens from various portions of the county assembled at and in the vicinity of the Court House, attracted thither by the unusual interest which the case has evoked. Ere the hour of ten A. M. had arrived the court room was excessively thronged, every available space which could afford standing room was occu-pled and tenaciously retained by the eager spectators, many of whom, doubtless, would prefer to forego the nece saries of life for a season, than to miss the sensational elements composing a "first class murder trial."

APPEARANCE OF THE PRISONER.

Justice Joseph F. Barnard, County Judge Robert Cochran and the Justices of Sessions having seated themselves on the beach, the prisoner was conducted from the jail into court by Deputy Sheriff Ford. In appearance Buckhout has undergone no perceptible alteration since his first trial in March, 1870—his full face and firm step at once denoting that his conscience has not once denoting that his conscience has not affected his gastronomic desires at least. The accused presented a rather genteel exterior, and would certainly be one of the last men in the court room whom a stranger would allow his attention to rest on for a moment were he endeavoring to fix upon the party who is

ON TRIAL FOR HIS LIFE.

On entering the court and having taken a seat by his counsel, the prisoner was apparently as unconcerned as though he were a mere spectator, and encountered the gaze of the large audience with a degree of composure which amounted almost to absolute indifference. He appears to possess a keen appreciation for the humerous, as he occasionally during the day chuckied heartily at some of the quaint answers elected by counsel while endeavoring to empanoi a jury.

BUCKHOUT'S FEARPUL CRIME.

deavoring to empanei a jury.

It will be remembered that the terrible crime with which the prisoner is charged, took place at the residence of the accused in Sleepy Hollow, near Tarrytown, on the Hudson, during the forenoon of January 1, 1870. Buckhout, who had the reputation of being shittees, dissipated fellow, on that day invited a neighbor, named Alfred Rendell, and his son, Charles Rendell, to his house that they might respectuate their friendship and mangurate the New Year with a social draught of cider, which he had provided for the occasion. Wholly unsuspicious of the MURDEROUS DESIGNS of their host, the lather and son, having accepted the invitation, were seated in Buckhout's parlor, and while the cider Rendall was in the act of sipping a goblet of cider, which had beek handed him by the prisoner, the latter, unnoticed, stepped into an adjoining room, took up a double-barrelled shotzun and discharged one of the barrels at Mr. Rendall, killing him instantly. A moment afterwards the contents of the remaining barrel were lodged in the head of Charles Rendall, who fell to the floor

Buckhout then hastened into the kitenen where his wife, Louisa Buckhout, was engaged, and attacking her with the fury of a wild beast, smashed in her skull with the gun, the stock of which he bloke white dealing repeated blows on the head of his prostrate victim. A TRIPLE MURDER, the accused ran from the scene of his bloody work to the house of an acquaintance, where he told what he had done, and requested to be taken to a constable, who would conduct him safely to the county jail, "as he feared that the neighbors would lynch him." The prisoner was tried for the murder of Altred Rendali in this court last March, as before indicated, the defence being alleged insanity on the part of the accused at the time of the commission of the crime. After a laborious trial, which lasted eight or nine days, and during which Backhout was ably defended by an imposing array of counsel, foremost among whom was the late Grenville T. Jenks, the jury disagreed upon a verdict, there being nine for conviction and three for acquittal.

DIFFICULTY IN OBTAINING JURORS.

The whole of yesterday was occupied in the endeavor to empanel a jury, which proved a difficult task, as owing to the notoriety of the case, nearly all who were called having already had their minds made up as to the guilt or innocence of the prisoner. In consequence of this state of affairs only three jurors had been accepted up to a late hour in the afternoon.

"SMITH," THE SCAMP.

Some Further Developments in his Brilliant (?)

Country and his Wife.
The fashionable young gent, who on last Saturday afternoon tried to victimize Park & Tilford to the tune of twenty-five dollars, by means of a forged letter, purporting to come from Mrs. E. Scofield, one of their customers, asking for a loan of the above sum, has been brought "dead to rights." By the statement of Sergeant Williams, of the Third By the statement of Sergeant Williams, of the Third precinct, Brooklyn, who now holds a warrant from Judge Buckley for the same man on a similar complaint, "Smith" is evidently an old offender, As far back as 1846 he was arrested for desertion from the army, being attached at that time to the Sixth regiment mounted cavairy. His real name is William Lect. In 1804 he was married to Theresa Caspar, a beautiful young lady, then living in Ninth street, near Fifth avenue, Brooklyn, whom he also deserted, leaving her penniless. Some time after he was charged with stealing a set of furs from a Mr. Van Brunt, and since that time has been living by various devices, but always managing te keep out of the clutches of the law. Al'hough his first wife is still in existence, another lady claiming to be his spouse visited him resterday at the prison in Essex street, where he is confined at present, and wept profusely over the situation of her quondam liege lord.

ANOTHER MR. SMITH.

"Doing" a Doctor-Another Specimen of Sneak Thievery.

A low sized, dark complexioned man, with a frightful looking scar on the side of his neck, was brought to Essex Market yesterday morning, charged with robbing the office of Dr. Benjamin Dawson, No. 8 East Eliteenth street. It seems that about three weeks ago a man called at the doctor's office when he was out, and, on being informed of the circumstance, told the servant he would walt the circumstance, told the servant he would walt a little while. The servant went down stairs and left the supposed patient in the office. After waiting about twenty minutes he went to the basement door, told the servant that he had no time to wait longer, and to tell the Doctor that Mr. Smith, of Ninetceath street, called. The servant saw the man jump tato a light wagon that was standing at the door and drive off. Some ten minutes later the doctor came home and immediately discovered that all the available articles in his office had suddenly disappeared. His opera glasses, his mecreschaum pipe, which he had naid thirty dollars for, his flavana cigars, his kid gloves and his lady's gold bracelet were "non sunt inventi." He placed the matter in the hands of detectives Lyon and king, who succeeded in arresting Mr. Smith, of Nineteenth street, in Laurens street, on last Tuesday. A great many other doctors have been victimized in like manner, and complaints are constantly pouring in which point towards the same individual. James Williams, alias Smith, was fully identified by the servant, Susan McKune, and held to answer at General Sessions by Judge Scott.

THE HERALD AS A DETECTIVE.

In Newark last Saturday evening the police found two semi-drunken men wandering the streets, having in their possession a valuable horse and wagon. Supposing that they had been on a spree the officers took the men to the station house and blaced the horse and wagon in a livery stable. At the station house they gave their names as Edward Knapp-and Michael Farrell, both of New York. It soon began to be suspected that the property found with them belonged to others, and on Sunday, in looking over the advertisements in the New York Herald, Captain Dwyer saw an account of a stolen horse, the description of which tailied exactly with the one found as above. On confronting the pair with the Herald they confessed to having stolen the property, and also admitted that they belonged to a notorious gang of horse theves in the metropolis. The proprietor of the horse and wagon, a Mr. John Dobbins, of No. 511 First avenue, New York, was notified. He identified the property as his. Yesterday the pair of thieves were taken to New York in charge of the Newark officer and handed over to the metropolitan authorities.

On that evening Carey was in the liquor store of Paul Broderick, No. 34 Bethune street, when he was assaulted by a gang of ruffians. He was taken to his home and his assailants escaped. The police did not hear of the affair until last evening, when they arrested Charies collins, who was identified as one of the men engaged in the assault on Carey. He was locked up at the Charles street police station. Coroner Hermann will take Carey's ante-mortem statement to-day.
